STUDENT LIFE

In 1956, it cost $150 to attend Covenant College. Today, you would be lucky to spend that much on textbooks alone. But ask almost anyone and they will tell you: it was well worth every penny, and not just because they received a quality education. Though at one time students were only allowed one dance a semester, students this year found their schedules quickly becoming filled not only with weekend dance parties but with water balloon fights, soccer games, hours of painting and adorning halls for Carter Christmas (followed by hours spent in the chapel as a result of an ill-timed fire alarm), attending plays, practicing for Mountain Affair, and... oh yea, homework.

FACULTY & STAFF

They're our professors, our bosses, our advisors - the ones we look to for guidance and support as we stumble through our college years. We respect them, complain about them, and aspire to be like them. What we often forget is that many of our authorities were at one time, just like us – Covenant students. Bill Davis, Steve Corbett, Rebecca Pennington, Jim Drexler, Julie Moore, the list could go on. Back in the day they played pranks, participated in hall rivalry, and pulled all nighters. Their impact on the Covenant community was felt long before they joined the ranks as full time staff. For instance, on page number nineteen of the Residence Hall Manual, under the heading "Playing and Pranks," it is written that, "Absolutely no animals, dead or alive, may be used." Many a student, after carefully scrutinizing this beloved manual, has wondered just where such a rule originated. This guideline was established years ago - following a series of pranks involving the Catacombs and frozen road kill. Julie Moore, then a student, was a victim of this mischief, receiving the gift of a dead possum stuffed in a Christmas stocking. So go ahead and ask them. Like Julie, they certainly have more stories to tell.

You are in the midst of the spring semester doldrums. While winter has finally loosened its grip on the mountain, a haze of fog, drizzle and the stench of blossoming pear trees has been left in its wake. Spring break is ancient history and Easter break is a mere shadow, barely visible through the heap of papers, projects and exams taking over your desk. Your backpack is mysteriously growing heavier by the day, and it occurs to you that you spend more time hunched over a library carrel than you do sleeping. But just when you think that you can't shuffle your way to one more class, or that your stomach just can't take one more day in the Great Hall...hope appears. It's Student Appreciation Day. Whether you were served a cinnamon roll at breakfast by Chaplain Messner, pet a llama alongside Dean Voyles, or were given a scoop of ice cream by President Nielson, this third annual event gave everyone a noticeable pep in their step. With Starbucks coffee in your hand, you suddenly hung on to every word uttered by your professor donning his "I Love Covenant Students" t-shirt. Your hours at work-study began to slip away as you anticipated winning one of the many hourly give-aways, and the thick fog was barely noticeable as you made your way to the Great Hall for a steak dinner. At the end of the day (enveloped in a food coma), you feel that Student Appreciation Day, not Christmas, is truly the most wonderful time of the year.

If Covenant College had not purchased Carter Hall over fifty years ago, a local Catholic church would have converted the old hotel into an abbey. Fortunately for many young couples, the Marriage Mill on the Hill has been cranking out engagements, rather than housing nuns, since 1960. Not only has young love blossomed within Carter's walls, but over the years it has hosted classrooms, the rat lab, the chapel (in what we now know as the Tuck Shoppe), a cafeteria, and the only all-women's dorm. Today, it contains offices, the Great Hall, the mail room, and of course, houses almost 250 students, making it the largest residence hall on campus. So while you may feel a bit nauseous walking through the couple-strewn lobby, just be thankful that your beloved Carter isn't someone else's beloved convent.

First it was Belz, a strange circular building dubbed "the men's dorm." Soon, Rayburn and Schmidt were added on either side. Now, it's Founders Hall, the building that forces you to stop and ask for directions if you want to have any chance of making it out alive. Equally perplexing to the outsider is the great assortment of personalities that call this building home. From artistic to athletic, hipster to chic, Founders has it all. One might compare them to the Brady Bunch – it's a combination that you would never expect, but this group must somehow form a, rather less annoying, family.

When the original men of The Five Points were given a chance to name their hall, it took them an entire year to come to a decision. During that year, the boys went by "The Unknown." After much deliberation, a consensus was reached. Their inspiration was found in the symbol of a five-pointed star, each point representing the five suites nestled on the hall. Other Maclellan/Rymer halls have put equal thought into their names. "Harambe!" is Swahili for "Unity" and "Chi Alpha" stands for "Christ First." The thoughtfulness of these residents is reflected not only in their hall names, but also in their intentional, charismatic friendships that form throughout the building - across halls and in between floors. Whether filming for Mac Movie Night, painting up for the Strut or claiming Assassins victory once again, Mac/Rymer residents have some solid proof that they are the real champions.

In the 1920s, Garnet Carter, the founder of Rock City, built the world's first miniature golf course, using the game as a lure to draw tourists to the Lookout Mountain Hotel. He dubbed it "Tom Thumb Golf." Lookout Mountain's mini golf tradition lives on through the annual Andreas Open, in which the residents of Andreas construct a putt-putt course that twists and turns throughout the building. This is not the residence hall's only claim to fame. Andreas has also made its mark through the widely popular Nacho Fest and as the host for the annual Halloween dance party. It may be the newest building, but Andreas has proven it is not without tradition.

SENIORS

You've done it. You have now joined the ranks of Covenant grads that date back to the graduating class of 1955. Out of these ranks have come influential politicians, passionate social workers, stunning artists, successful business owners, steadfast pastors, encouraging dads, loving moms, and best friends. The common thread tying this diverse and vast crowd of graduates together? They all got their start here, on top of a mountain, at Covenant College... just like you. You've pulled all nighters stringing together the final touches to your 3D Design project, spent countless hours studying for those famous Wescher exams, poured your soul into papers for the ever-intimidating Foreman, sat through approximately 300 chapels, and put on the "spring-fever-senioritis-after-burners" to finish your SIP just in time for graduation. But amidst all that hard work and effort come fun memories that will always have a place in your heart. Memories of playing Chapel lawn soccer, enjoying a beautiful afternoon from the spot of your cozy hammock, letting go in spontaneous hall dance parties, pulling all nighters just to watch movies with friends, and rocking out to some of Covenant's best musicians. As you embark to wherever, to do whatever, with whomever, don't forget the challenges, the fun, the struggles, and the excitement that you've had together as the 56th graduating class of Covenant College.

TARTAN STAFF

At approximately 6 o'clock every weeknight, Covenant students across campus begin to trickle into the library, settle into the Psych commons, and travel down the mountain to Stone Cup, Yellow Deli, and many other studying hotspots around Chattanooga. And while you've been studying, we've been working on your 2011 Covenant College Tartan. Emily has given herself over to the joys of proofreading each and every word that we've managed to compose. For every three hours you spent shaking your groove thang at Kilter or having your photo taken in Carter lobby, Garrett spent twenty hours taking and editing the photos as you see them here. While you were last minute cramming for those French quizzes, Kaia was setting deadlines, preparing lists for photo shoots, and labeling each and every photo to ensure accuracy and organization. And while you took the occasional study break to watch an episode of Glee or Community, Zach was dragging, dropping, and cropping to design a creative structure for the overall vision of this year's book. Our hope is that this book holds a sentimental meaning for you now, but even more so later. Like any fine wine, we hope that this book ages in a sweet, sweet way. Many thanks go to Shannon (our publisher), Jen (our advisor), Annie (our last minute and always willing photographer), and most importantly to Student Senate. The beauty and spirit found in these pages are made possible by you and made for you - so enjoy all the bells and whistles.
